It seems that the editor of the banks was not pleased with the proceedings of the Democratic meeting in this city on Saturday last. We do not recollect when he was ever pleased with a Democratic meeting. Our proceedings did not suit him in 1861. He was furiou a 'the party and its mem hers in 1862. He did not approve of our State Convention in 1863, which was suppressed by the milihas a grudge against us for canvassing the presented by the military satrap, Gilbert. [The following paragraph puts the question as if it were the very case of Stanton and the office tenure act; and the succeeding para graph responds as if the President's counsel had put it in his answer to the impeaching Senate. Look at it .- Ed. Int.]

The third and last question on which you ave desired an expression of my opinion is whether it is the duty of the President to exercise the power of appointment in the case of these officers, in view of the express pro-visions of the act of 1865, distinctly declaring the will of Congress that he should not ap point them, and directly against that expression of the will of the legislature, and especially before any judicial determination has Resolved. That the delegates to this been had of the first two questions to which I foregoing reasoning, that he possesses the power, constitutionally, to make appointments to the office of assistant assessor, I think that it is clearly his duty to exercise that power. The question of his constitutional authority in the case presented depends upon the view that the President may take of the unconstitutionality of the existing legis-lation on the subject of that office. If he fully concurs in the view I have taken of the quesion, there is no escape from the conclusion hat he alone can lawfully fill the offices. It is his duty to do all that he has lawfully pos o do when the occasion requires an exercise of his authority. To do less on such an occa sion would be pro tanto to abdicate his high office. The Constitution is the supreme law a law superior and paramount to any other. If any law be repugnant to the Constitution t is void; in other words it is no law. It is resolution, which being put to the vote the peculiar province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is in particular lar cases. But before such cases arise, and n the absence of the authoritative exposition of the law by that department, it is equally the duty of the officer holding the executive power of the Government to determine for the purposes of his own conduct and action, as well the operation of conflicting laws as the unconstitutionality of any one. It will be observed, let me remark in consponse to the resolution, expressed his clusion, that the action of the President, in appointing to the office in question, will not seems nature, so concentrated the mind. SPRING. BY W. H. BURLEIGH

The sweet south winds, so long Sleeping in other climes, or sunny seas, Or dallying with the orange trees In the bright land o' song. Was unto us, and lamblingly sweeps by Like a glad spirit of the sunlit sky.

The laborer at his toil
Feels on his check the dewy sise, and lifts
His oven brow to catch his fragrant gitts—
The aromatic spoil
Borne from the biossoming gardens of the South, While its faint sweetness lingers round his mouth.

The bursting bud looks up
To cheer the sunlight, while it lingers yet
On the warm hillside—and the violet Opens its azare cup Meckly, and countless young flowers awake to fling
Their earliest incense on the gales of spring.

Continual songs arise

From universal nature—birds and streams Mingle their voices and the glad earth seems
A second paradise!

Sunshine and song, and tragrance, all are thine,
Thrice blessed spring!—thou bravest gifts

Not unto Earth alone—
Thou hast a blessing from the human heart,
Balm for its wounds, and healing for its smart,
Telling of Winter flown
And bringing upon thy rainbow wing.
Type of Eternal Light—thrice blessed Spring.

AGRICULTURAL,

ABOUT SEEDS.

Every experienced farmer and gardener understands the value of good seeds—good in every respect. They know that seeds pro-duced from an unhealthy plant is less valuable than that from one that is perfectly healthy, and the careful cultivator is particular to save seeds from the best specimens. Our cultivated plants are mostly derived scarce in this vicinity, we have used ordinary wheat flour solely, for the last few years, and though we should prefer the rye where it could be as readily obtained, yet we find the wheat flour to answer finely. A correspondent from plants which originally grew in a wild state, and, by careful culture and selection, have been brought from a much less valuable state than they are at presnt in. It is understood as a principle, by enlightened culturists, that where a vegetable or plant has been that where a vegetable or plant has been brought from a lower to a higher state, that there is a constant tendency or liability to return to their original condition, unless care be used to keep what has been gained, or improved thereon. The only way of preventing this deterioration is in good cultivation, selection and rotation, or change of locality. With all one present knowledge and improved. With all our present knowledge and improved culture, there are some plants which gradually lose their good qualities, or show a constant tendency to drop back. Such are measurably remedied by change of locality and special care. If a plant be removed from its natural about rearing caives in conjunction with dairying to be accounted for? Every calf from the milch cows can be raised without care. If a plant be removed from its natural soil and climate, this deterioration is apt to be much more rapid. Seeds, in general, produce better where the change is from a colder to a warmer climate, and from a poorer to a richer soil. Where there is not this sensibility to soil and climate, good cultivation and judicious selection from the most vigorous seven years old I helped feed a number of years of the produced. y to soil and climate, good cultivation and udicious selection from the most vigorous and best plants and specimens hwen they are fully ripe, drying them and properly storing, where they will not be liable to too great heat or gather dampness, will, instead of deteriorand being now raising some from three to nine weeks old, I can say with confidence ating, improve their qualities; and the farmer who thus saves and preserves his own seed, knows what he plants—he introduces no for-I that any man must be a little wanting i eign seed of weeds to cause him future trouble understand this simple, and in many districts uriversal, way of breeding, weaning and rearacted upon that different varieties of the same species or families, are liable to mix or hybridize, if grown near each other and the varieties below the same the same that the same stands thirty six hours, and then the cream taken of the same that the s It is a fact well known, but less frequently taken off, are in as thriving and growing a state as any can be. rieties blossom the same time; the winds often bear the pollen from one to the other. Bees No herd of dairy cows can be kept up and improved to return full profits, unless attenand insects also act as agents in distributing pollen and fertilizing plant, so that there is tion is given to use a first class bull from a good milking dam, as well as from pure blood. no absolute certainty of retaining purity, un-less different varieties are entirely disconless different varieties are entirely discon-nected at a considerable distance. So great and then all the heifer calves from good cows may be weaned and brought round to be milch is this liability to mix, that we constantly see examples of it in many kinds of fruit, &c. cows in due season. Some few years since, a gentleman started a large dairy in the West. I corresponded with him, and declared Plant the seeds of an apple. strawbery or grape, and there is seldom a plant produced having the same qualities of the parent. Our Indian corn is another example of the mixture of varieties, which is really distinguished external appearance. The other grains and grasses are less liable, or show the differ-

In searching a field of wheat, rye, oats or barley, perhaps a few stalks may be found which bear heads, the grain of which varies some respects from the rest of the crop. These, if selected and saved separately, and planted, and the best of the product saved tor future planting, and such selection and careful culture continued for a term of years, will succeed in establishing valuable new varieties. Such has been the case, and the same may in the future be accomplished by any one having the necessary patience and perseverance, to the gradual improvement of the art of agriculture. In like manner corn may be improved by careful selection and culture develop any particular point, but it is a work of years, and cannot be soon or suddenly ac-complished. The potato being of a different class, and propagated differently, is not liable to change by mixture. The common mode of culture of the potato is to propagate from tubers, or eyes, and not from the seed which is produced in small "potato balls" from the ends of the stems, following the blossoms. The potato is merely an enlarged underground branch, and the eyes answer the apple tree, or the grapevine, in a dorman state; so that new varieties or mixtures car be no more produced from planting the tubers than new varieties of grapes can be had from planting cuttings of the vice, or new varieties of apples from grafting the scion into different stock. To obtain new varieties of potatoes, the seed form ripe balls of the potato and seldom are there two of a kind produced from seed of the same plant. In this way of planting, the seed, and selecting the most promising sorts, judging from the fall-age top and the tubers, have been produced many new varieties.

Probably most of the readers of this have heard or read of the great labor, perseverance and expense of the Rev. Mr. Goodrich in im ving one potato, and resulting in the addition of several of the new varieties which are before the public; probably no man ever spent the same amount of time. labor and expense in improving any one article of agri-cultural productions, as did he, during his life-time, improving the potato. Only abou half a dozen varieties were considered worth, of cultivation out of some sixteen thousand produced, thus showing the great uncertainty of seed producing even as good as its parent

Purity of seed is only retained, as above intimated, by careful culture, selection and perfect maturity, and freedom from any adcare cannot be exercised in selecting, cleaning and preserving seed—requisites too frequently unbeeded by far too many farmers, who mixture of other foreign seed. Too much would find their profits greatly enhanced by proper attention to these points.

Soil and climate, as before intimated, exert received and ready, free distribution to all who will

a very strong influence on all varieties of seeds and products. Different varieties of soil give particular qualities to the same variety of plants, thus showing the governing influence the soil exerts, and the connection of soil and product. The season, whether wet or dry, also affects the quality and quantity of produce, from any given amount of seed The mode of culture, kind and quality of manure applied, amount, and how applied, besides many other causes, exert a marked influence over the products of any variety of seed; but in all cases it is found that with the same culture, &c , that superior seed produces superior product.

The rotation, or course of eropping, will not only affect the quantity of the product, then, of the foregoing, it becomes the farmer who would improve his culture and obtain the best results from his labor expended, to plant only the best seed, and use special care in growing and saving his seed, and improving the quality of his seed and his general culture.

Messrs Editors—We are surprised to see that one of your correspondents finds it difficult to persuade his bees to work on rye flour in the open air, before the blossoms appear. Our experience has been of a different character. As soon as the weather permits the bees to fly and discharge their accumulated focces, they are ready to commence breeding with vigor; and experience demonstrates the advantage of beginning stimulative feeding, to encourage the spread of brood. It is not FEED FLOUR TO YOUR BEES

Therefore, we supply them with this encouragement; and where the hives have plenty of honey, it is an open question with us whether in pleasant weather the flour alone is not all the stimulus requir-

Let us tell you, readers, how we feed it As soon as the bees begin to fly freely in the spring, we prepare one or two boxes, say 16 by 20 inches and 6 inches deep. (we use old cover of hives.) We put a good layer of clean straw in the bottom, spread the flour on the straw, and set the boxes in some quiet sanny place, in or near the apiary. To start the bees to work, we put a few drops of honey or sugar syrup on a comb in each hox; once started, they will keep at it until the blossoms appear. The bees quickly "get the hang of the operation." and it is amusing to see them collecting the flour-the boxes being nearly black with bees, and the whole air re-sounding with their joyous hum. They moisten the flour with honey from their stomachs, and take it up with their jaws and front legs; then, hovering in the air over the box, transfer it to the baskets on their hind legs, then away to the hive. We had them thus at work (Italians) one bright still day this month, when the thermometer was at 25°!

To-day (March 12th) was constantly shower;

yet with the covers over the boxes propped open to admit them, they have carried in fully ten pounds of flour, working until it was dark. This suggests putting the boxes in a shed opening to the south, if such a one is at hand, where they can work under cover. Our only fear has sometimes been that they might carry in too much flour, but the combs show no especial accumulation of it, and it is evident that they use it almost as fast as gather-
